

Why Community Payback?

Community Payback in London is a positive, cost effective and viable alternative to more conventional punishments. It gives offenders a chance to 'pay back' to local communities by doing work, which helps to improve and enhance the environment. It does not replace paid employment but complements work carried out by local authorities. Community Payback is the partnership that helps to make London cleaner, safer and greener for its residents, workers and visitors.

What is Community Payback?

Community Payback is a partnership between London Probation, the Metropolitan Police Service (MPS) and 32 local London authorities. The scheme supports the MPS Safer Neighbourhoods local policing programme.

It enables low risk offenders serving community sentences to make reparation to local communities as part of their punishment for offending.

Every neighbourhood in London now has a dedicated Safer Neighbourhoods police team whose aim is to listen and talk to members of the local community and find out what affects their daily life and feelings of security. Under Community Payback, the local police team then works with the community, London Probation and partner agencies to find lasting solutions.

What are the aims of Community Payback?

Potential work projects must meet the following criteria:

- Reduce crime and the fear of crime
- Be identified by local communities as a priority
- Be visible to local communities
- Improve quality of life for the community

How does it work?

Local people suggest ideas for Community Payback projects and an assessment is carried out to ensure that the work proposed is suitable and meets the criteria outlined above.

London Probation staff supervise offenders doing Community Payback projects. Safer Neighbourhoods officers are involved in project planning and often attend to offer additional support and engage with local people.

Examples of work completed include:

- Graffiti removal
- Refurbishing parks, playgrounds and leisure / sports facilities
- Cutting and clearing overgrown foliage
- Clearing rubbish from land and alleyways
- Landscaping and planting
